Minnesota Medical Assistance Guidelines: July 2026 Figures

Minnesota’s updated Medical Assistance figures take effect on July 1, 2026, changing several of the key standards that determine eligibility for long-term care. Whether you are planning ahead for a spouse, helping a parent manage nursing home costs, or keeping an existing plan current, these numbers shape what your family can protect.

WHAT IS MEDICAL ASSISTANCE?

Medical Assistance (MA) is Minnesota’s Medicaid program. For many families, it is the program that ultimately pays for nursing home care, services through the Elderly Waiver, and other long-term care supports. Eligibility depends on income and asset standards that the state adjusts every January, July, and October.

WHAT THESE NUMBERS MEAN

Maximum Asset Allowance. When one spouse needs Medical Assistance for long-term care, the spouse who remains at home, known as the community spouse, may keep countable assets up to this limit. As of July 2026, that limit is $162,660.

Statewide Average Payment for Skilled Nursing Facility (SAPSNF) Care. Now $11,869 per month, this figure represents the average cost of skilled nursing facility care in Minnesota. It is used to calculate the period of ineligibility when assets are gifted or transferred for less than fair market value during the lookback period.

Minimum and Maximum Monthly Income Allowance. The community spouse is entitled to keep monthly income within a protected range, currently $2,705 to $4,066.50. If the at-home spouse's own income falls below the minimum, income may be shifted from the spouse receiving care to close the gap.

Basic Shelter Allowance. Now $812, this standard is used to determine whether high housing costs entitle the community spouse to an income allowance above the minimum.

Personal Needs Allowance. A nursing home resident receiving Medical Assistance may keep $132 each month for personal expenses such as clothing, haircuts, and other items not covered by the facility.

Home Maintenance Allowance. In certain circumstances, a person receiving care who is expected to return home may set aside up to $1,330 per month to maintain their household in the meantime.

SIS-EW Maintenance Needs Allowance. Elderly Waiver clients living in the community may retain $1,353 per month for their living expenses.

Special Income Standard (SIS). Set at $2,982, an amount equal to three times the Federal Benefit Rate, the SIS helps determine income eligibility for some Elderly Waiver clients receiving services at home or in assisted living.

Housing Support. Formerly known as Group Residential Housing (GRH), Housing Support helps pay room and board for eligible adults with low income in certain settings. The updated base rate is $1,221 per month.

Utility, Electricity, and Phone Allowances. These standards are used in shelter-related income calculations, including whether the spouse at home qualifies for an income allowance above the minimum. The current figures are $667 for utilities when paying heating or cooling, $235 for electricity, and $62 for phone, each effective through 9/30/2026.

Home Equity Limit. Home equity above $752,000 can make a person ineligible for Medical Assistance payment of long-term care services. Important exceptions apply, including when a spouse continues to live in the home.

Remedial Care Expense Deduction. A monthly deduction of $275 available in certain care settings when calculating a resident's contribution toward the cost of care.

100% of Federal Poverty Guidelines (FPG). Now $1,330 per month for a household of one, this benchmark is used in several Medical Assistance income calculations.

Medicare SNF Deductible, Days 21 to 100. This is a Medicare figure rather than a Medical Assistance one, but it is often the first long-term care cost families encounter: a daily cost share of $200 for days 21 through 100 of a skilled nursing facility stay. Medicare coverage of skilled nursing care ends after day 100, which is when Medical Assistance planning frequently begins.

WHY THESE FIGURES MATTER FOR YOUR PLAN

A plan built on outdated numbers can leave assets unprotected, shortchange the spouse at home, or create an avoidable period of ineligibility. Because Minnesota updates these standards three times a year, reviewing your plan against the current figures is one of the simplest ways to keep it working as intended.
