

Mimi Lyons

LAW CLERK

As the law clerk at Everbright Legacy Law, Mimi supports the firm's attorneys with legal research and writing. Her working style is patient and compassionate, and she is always ready to help.

Mimi has always been drawn to elder law. All four of her grandparents played a big role in her upbringing, and as they have aged, she has seen how much families need support through diagnoses and care decisions. She is grateful to work for a firm that helps so many families through tough transitions.

Mimi studied political science and human rights at Southern Methodist University and is a third-year law student at Mitchell Hamline School of Law.

After graduating, Mimi moved to Washington, D.C., and worked as a senior associate at a public affairs firm. There she worked extensively on the firm's pro bono and human rights portfolio, with a focus on advocating for the release of international political prisoners held by autocratic regimes.

Outside of work and law school, Mimi volunteers in her community and enjoys playing tennis, golfing, and walking her bulldog, Brixton.
